■ Tyson & Mendes has launched a new practice group dedicated to the defense of insurers and manufacturers of autonomous vehicles. The Autonomous Vehicles Liability Litigation practice group, led by Managing Partner Robert Tyson and Partner Cayce Greiner, provides clients with the firm's deep automotive liability litigation experience and knowledge about the ever-changing regulation and legislation arising in response to more autonomous vehicles on the road.

Through its automotive liability litigation experience, Tyson & Mendes has represented manufacturers, dealers, trucking companies, national automobile and trucking rental companies, and other transportation and corporate clients. The firm has been involved in the investigation and defense of fraudulent automobile insurance claims and has provided defense for the insureds of several leading international insurance companies.

Additionally, Tyson & Mendes specializes in "damages only" cases related to automotive liability and autonomous vehicles. Defended cases have included admitted liability wrongful death matters and catastrophic injury with multi-million-dollar demands against some of the foremost plaintiffs' attorneys in the country.
